

ABSTRACT

Described is an apparatus comprising a transimpedance amplifier to receive an input current from a photodiode and provide an output voltage at first and second differential output terminals. A receive signal strength indicator may generate a 5 differential receive signal strength indication (RSSI) signal based, at least in part, upon a voltage across the first and second differential output terminals.